Director of National Intelligence hopeful increased security, audits can stop leaks

April 8, 2014

By J.J. Green
WTOP

"Tag the data, tag the people." Director of National Intelligence James Clapper says that's the "bumper-sticker mantra" of a key part of the intelligence community's plan to prevent another catastrophic release of information like the one former NSA contractor Edward Snowden pulled off last year.

The extent of the damage revealed in the numerous programs, sources and methods Snowden farmed out to journalists and activists may not be fully known for years, according to experts.

"What we're pushing is a project called ICITE (pronounced EyeSight), which is the Intelligence Community Information Technology Enterprise," Clapper said in an exclusive recent interview with WTOP.

...

Continue reading at WTOP.com